

Commercial Litigation

While our traditional litigation base is centered on plaintiffs' personal injury trial work, Corboy & Demetrio also handles commercial litigation cases on a contingency basis. Our practice includes litigation in the area of breach of contract, breach of fiduciary duty, stockholder disputes and securities litigation.

Following is a representative sample of the types of cases we have handled.

We are representing a municipality in a breach of contract lawsuit against 15 design professionals for failure to design housing projects in conformance with their agreement and are also representing a number of sales managers in a breach of sales commission agreement against their employer for nonpayment of commission over a period of several years.

Where an agreement gave a 5% ownership interest in a real estate venture company to the project developer and the company failed to honor that ownership interest, Corboy & Demetrio is representing the developer in his demand for his share of the company.

We represent a business owner and his company in an action against a partnership, its related companies and individuals associated with the partnership for failure to pay the contractor for extensive electrical restoration and maintenance work performed at a Chicago building. We are also handling a case where a real estate agent who was not paid her commission on the sale of a $5 million property.

Our commercial litigation practice includes but is not limited to the following areas: Business Litigation Contract Disputes Securities Litigation Antitrust Litigation RICO Litigation

Attorneys

- Thomas A. Demetrio
- René A. Torrado, Jr.